

Thailand, Udon Thani

Quick Overview

Get dirty and have fun doing it! Pottery making allows you to share your artistic expression, through purposeful play with clay.

Pottery making is an ancient art and there are lots of things for the novice potter to learn and the advanced potter to explore. A local artisan will guide you through the process of making your own earthenware pieces and share the techniques that have long been used in Thai pottery.

Program Description

This workshop invites you to delve into an artistic adventure that engages your artistic passion in what may be - a new and different way. It's all about taking you through the basics in this week long course, trimming traditional pottery forms, and Thai pottery techniques such as pulling handles. Which will allow you to bring your ideas and sketches to life, as you immerse yourself in this creative skill-building workshop, designed to improve your pottery making abilities.

You will attend several workshops under the direction of a local pottery artist. During your program you will also make a scheduled visit to Ban Chiang, which is an important prehistoric cultural and archaeological site, recognized by UNESCO for its significance to world heritage. There you will have an opportunity to explore the juxtaposition of a new, contemporary visual language in pottery, by examining iconic pottery forms with earthenware clay, and engage in further discovery of the connection between form and surface, while addressing alteration, both on and off the wheel.

Most importantly, you will bring your favorite creative expression to life in the form of your own ceramic work, when you use decorative techniques of drawing, painting and carving into the ceramics while they dry.
